5 questions worth asking Srinath live tomorrow.

BigHammer.ai founder and CEO Srinath Reddy is running a free live masterclass on how to reduce your Databricks costs (up to 75%).

I spent years on the selling side. If I were on your side of the table, these are the five I'd ask about any plan to cut my Databricks bill.

Richard Lawrence

1. What was measured from my own data, and what was assumed?

Measured comes straight from your billing and run history. Assumed is a rate someone chose.

A number worth trusting keeps the two apart, and shows the rule behind every estimate.

2. What's been left out?

Contract discounts. Cloud VM costs. Spend nobody can trace to a job or a team.

A savings figure at list price on a heavily discounted contract can be wildly optimistic.

3. Could the savings add up to more than I actually spend?

If the answer isn't an obvious no, something has been counted twice.

Moving a job to cheaper compute and then right-sizing it are not two savings on the same spend. The second only applies to what's left after the first.

4. Which of my jobs actually belong on Databricks?

Not “should we leave?” That forces an all-or-nothing answer, and neither answer is right.

Ask which jobs use what makes the platform special, and which would run happily anywhere.

5. How do you prove the migrated job matches before I switch off the old one?

A changed join or a one-hour timezone shift won’t fail the run. It fails the business, usually weeks later.

A green tick says the job finished. It doesn’t say it was right.

Ask them of any plan to cut your Databricks bill.

Including ours.

We’d rather you trusted a smaller figure than doubted a bigger one.
